Introduction

INTRODUCTION

These three-days of short-term joint staff training event bring together researchers and practitioners from all DESINC LIVE partner institutions, in order to explore the interface between the social inclusion of international migrants in local urban areas and the experiences in non-conventional and innovative teaching techniques oriented to educators, students and professors in the fields of architecture, urban design and urban planning. By relying on the previous DESINC project outputs, the aim here is to lay the foundations of interactive and original pedagogies, by outlining a set of strategies, instruments and materials that are able to make migration-related issues more deeply connected to the teaching of urban design and planning.

The short-term joint staff training event aims to support participants in:

1. Sharing and socialising the key-words and principles of DESINC, in order to create continuity between the two experiences and facilitate cooperation among all participating partners.
2. Examining different aspects of living and dwelling in the context of migration (with a specific focus on housing and the right to the city) in order to apply this lesson to their own practice and teaching/training activity.
3. Sharing and analysing educational and research experiences in the contexts of migration, capable of providing insights that are useful for the creation of the DESINC LIVE educational offer.
4. Designing the educational offer with specific regard to the identification of its main subjects, as well as its structure, format and potential public.

This joint short-term staff training event has been co-designed and developed by the DESINC LIVE teams of University of Sheffield, Architecture Sans Frontières UK and Politecnico di Milano.
